

Photochromic Superabsorbents

Dr. Douglas Neckers, Bowling Green State University

Superabsorbents are amazing derivatives of cellulose that absorb hundreds of times their body weight in water. Recent work from our laboratories reports studies of photochromic superabsorbents for use as slow water release agents. This talk will focus on this little known, but potentially important, photochemical process.